Icilm.

The skin requires nothing else to give it the necessary vitality, to prevent it from sunburn, heat, cold or the effects of hard water, to prevent and cure the minor irritations due to overexposed skin, and to preserve the youthful fresh look to which most of us are so fatal.
Icilm is the only product that is so simple, natural and so effective for preventing them.Depot for Egypt: J. McQuiggy, Chemist.

THE LORDS DEBATE.

Here are some of the comments of the Press on the resolution against the Lords.

"The Government plan is simple, and certainly if it is carried out," says the "Daily News," "does not rest on the side of too drastic treatment of the hereditary chamber. Any thing less would mean the frank acceptance of the subordination of the elected House; a uni-cameral system when the Tories are in power; Liberalism and progress in a condition of permanent enervation and stagnation."

Every argument which the Opposition put forward in favour of a Second Chamber "is an argument against the House of Lords." "It is an obviously effective, though undoubtedly a rather cautious, plan, and a good many people will be inclined to think with Mr. Shackleton that one of the offers to the Lords might be begged from it," says the "Tribune," which also declares that the scheme "represents the irreducible minimum of reform."

The proposal is one of great moderation, while yet, within the limits, says the "Daily Chronicle," "of real efficacy. To attempt anything less would be to acquire in pretence fatal allies to the rights and liberties of the Commons, and to the possibility of serious Liberal reform."

In the opinion of the "Morning Leader," which declares that "Democracy has come to grips with privilege," the plan "is in a very degree satisfactory." "It," says the "Westminster Gazette," "the Tory Party are really sincere in acknowledging that the will of the country must prevail, they have here a scheme which effects the object without disturbing the constitution of the House of Lords."

Praising the plan after reading his speech that Mr. Balfour must have "had his tongue in his cheek," and regretting the Premier's attitude against the Referendum, the "Manchester Guardian" says:—"It is not sufficient to pronounce the Government's scheme bad; it is necessary to find a better. The 'Guardian' is not with approval Lord Robert Cecil's admission that 'the existing system operates one-sidedly.' The surprising feature of the debate, says the 'Liverpool Post,' is 'the absence of any substantial arguments against the proposals of the Prime Minister.' The Opposition, declares the 'Scottish Daily News,' 'have a miserable case to defend, and Mr. Balfour defended it miserably.' 'The date of the next General Election,' says the 'Leeds Mercury,' 'may be accurately forecasted when the date for the introduction of the Lord's Veto Bill is known.'

"Soldiers, if ever," declares the 'Times,' 'has a change of such moment been urged in a speech displaying so little sense of responsibility, or based upon such flimsy grounds. Sir Henry seems to be returning to the obsolete theory that the House of Commons—meaning in practice any chance majority of the House of Commons—is the true Sovereign, and not the Nation. The only reason which the Prime Minister could assign for his proposal was the party complexion of the House of Lords, which makes it passive under a Unionist Government, and active only when the Liberals are in power. Now, even if we assume this contention to be true, it is worth noting, as Liberals have noted, that the Government plan is a very imperfect remedy.'

"The devil can quote Scripture when it suits his ends, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, excellent man, will talk Constitutionalism when he wishes to bring about Revolution," says the "Standard." "Two courses are open: either to strengthen the House of Lords by restoring its character as an assembly elected on grounds of special competence for the work to be done, or to weaken it by diminishing its powers. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has chosen the second, and as it seems to us, the less judicious and less promising course," says the "Morning Post." "To the crude
